

Franz Litz is principal of Litz Energy Strategies. Franz brings nearly 30 years' experience in environment and energy policy to his work consulting state governments, think tanks, non-profit organizations, and industry. Franz is active at the state and regional levels helping to develop policy solutions to meet the challenge of climate change. As a state official in New York, he helped lead the state's efforts to develop climate and clean energy policies. Since leaving state service in 2007, he has worked with many other states and provinces, both individually and in regional groups of states and stakeholders. He has done this work from posts with the World Resources Institute, the Pace Energy and Climate Center, and more recently through his independent consultancy. Representative clients include the Pennsylvania Environmental Council, the Energy Foundation, and the Great Plains Institute.
